Focus of Research Program:

As Professor emeritus, I am using my accumulated knowledge of the emmetropization mechanism and an animal model, tree shrew (a small mammal closely related to primates), to help colleagues to develop funded studies of the emmetropization mechanism that operates in the developing juvenile eye to match the axial length to the eye’s optical power, producing an eye that is in good focus (emmetropia.) This mechanism involves retinally-generated signals that control the biochemistry and biomechanics of the sclera to regulate the axial length of the eye. The goal of this research is to learn how emmetropia is normally produced and how the emmetropization mechanism is disrupted to produce myopia or hyperopia in humans.
